These honorable evidences of the fine police which prevails on the high-road between Vera Cruz and the capital is a noble exposition of the police, good order and strength of the government of Mexico. One would think that there would be much better employed in ridding their own highways from their domestic enemies, than in sending troops to invade Texas; and that in case of a war the United States would be in no great danger of a government which is so weak to protect its own people and strangers from an enemy that infests the environs of its capital.

BRITISH CONSISTENCY.

However strenuously Great Britain may have exerted herself to interfere with our policy and prevent the annexation of Texas, it seems that she has had no scruples in making appropriation to herself of rich and valuable countries. While her great intriguer, Capt. Elliott, who turns out to be the identical "man in the white hat," a creature as mysterious as the celebrated "man with the iron mask," was floating from Texas to Mexico, in the absurd hope of defeating annexation; that grasping nation, and arrogant "Mistress of the Seas," fertile in resources, has had other intriguers in different portions of the world, successfully engaged in promoting annexation for her own benefit. In the proceedings of the British Parliament, we see that Mr. Chas. Buller made an able speech, and characterized "the annexation of New Zealand" as a work congenial with the British national temperament and character, and urgently imposed upon Great Britain by the conditions of its natural existence, of which the objects are, "to extend the employment of our shipping and our seamen—to secure new sources of supply for the raw materials of our manufactures, and open markets independent of the policy of other nations—to provide this destitute with a home, where honest labor may insure a subsistence; to augment the influence of the British name, and to spread over the farthest ends of the earth, our language, our arts, and our institutions."

It is all right in Great Britain to aggrandize herself by the annexation of these islands, of such vast commercial and political importance, and so full of beauty, productivity, and salubrity; it is, on her part, most honorable and proper, to extend her power over the most distant portions of the earth, and to plant her heavy foot upon those islands, by means of simple colonization. All this is noble and just in Great Britain. But when the U. States welcome to her Union, a Republic of kindred character—one that has been declared independent by Great Britain and other great nations, and is necessary to us, in order to check the invasion of foreign influence and ambition—then the tune is changed. Our people are represented as stimulated by a wild and lawless spirit of self-aggrandizement; Great Britain arrogantly interferes, throws into the question her most finished intriguer, and actually humbly our oldest ally, France, into a support of British policy. England may, if she choose, annex New Zealand, or even Patagonia, the land of Giants, as we learn by the last accounts; we shall not interfere. Upon the same principle, we expect her to act towards us. She has made a ridiculous failure in her late diplomacy—and we trust that she has become nauseated with the whole Texas question. We can scarcely believe, that she will take the responsibility of tampering with our rights in Texas, now so near completion.

Tolerably Severe.

We find the following letter in one of the late Irish papers. The "Molly Maguires" are a secret band, something like the "Barn Burners," whose midnight depredations bring reproach upon the Irish people. O'Connell, and the other leaders of the Repeal movement, have done all they could, to suppress such lawless associations, and have, in a great measure, succeeded. It would seem, however, that their remonstrances have been without effect upon the "Molly Maguires." Tom Steele, Dan's first lieutenant, in all such matters, addresses these graceless devils, in the following laconic epistle. We will call the language tolerably plain chatting, on this side the water, and we give it to our readers as a specimen of the style in which they do such things in "ould Ireland."

TO THE MOLLY MAGUIRES OF THE COUNTIES OF LEITRIM, CAVAN, &c.

The gallows does for those that do ill.—SHANESPEAR.

Conciliation Hall, June 4, 1845.

You miscreant traitors to Ireland. O'Connell, the father of your country, whose sublime principle of national regeneration, and Repealing the infernal Act of Union, is "THE MAN WHO COMMITS A CRIME GIVES STRENGTH TO THE ENEMY," last winter sent me among you in the discharge of my duty as his Head Pacifier of Ireland.

O'Connell did his duty, your sanctioned Catholic clergy gave you pastoral counsel, and you reformed for a while; but you have taken the advice of midnight villains and re-lapsed; you are again engaged in crime and blood, and are strengthening the hands of the enemies of your land suffering country.

You follow the example of the Rockites and the Whitefeet; the former got for Ireland the insurrection act, and the latter, the coercion bill.

You traitorous wretches who now follow their example, you villains, lost to every sense of duty, I did all I could while I was among you to save you from destruction, by turning you from your evil courses, but I find, in affliction of spirit, that my efforts were in vain.

The military and police are now going among you incendiaries, (who will soon sell your blood), and since you reject the gentle and balmy counsel of your country's almost sanctified benefactor and Father, and the solemn adjurations of your clergy from their altars, I now proclaim to you that you will be speedily taught by the stern and bitter advice of the prison, and hard labor on the treadmill—by the lesson of a voyage in the convict ship, perhaps to Norfolk Island, which I have so often described to you, where you will be worked chained together in gangs, and without wages, under a burning sun, and the whip of the merciless overseer.

You will be taught by the bayonets of the policemen, and the cracking of your necks by the hangmen on the gallows!

You outcast traitors, who give strength to Ireland's enemies, your country disclaims you—I abhor you.

THOMAS STEELE,
O'Connell's Head Pacifier, and Head Repeal Warden of Ireland.

From the New Orleans Picayune.

A TAR IN TROUBLE.

While in the office of Recorder Genois yesterday, a police officer, big with brief authority, entered, leading a "son of Neptune," who looked as dispirited as if he had been cast among the unfriendly savages of Friendly Islands.

The police officer said something à la mode to the Recorder—a rather pretty young woman, with dimpled cheeks, who sat within the railing, made a pantomimic motion to the old woman with wrinkled cheek who was by her side—the sailor looked imploringly at the dimple cheeks, gave a hitch with his sinister hand to his pantaloons, and expectorated a portion of the juice of the tobacco quid from his mouth. "Poor fellow," he seemed to say, "Here I am like a bark driven on the breakers, without compass or chart; I hung out my flag of distress, but instead of that trim & well-beloved craft (dimple cheeks), coming to my assistance, she sent that piratical looking cruiser (the police officer) to haul me into harbor."

"John Connor," said the Recorder.
"Aye, aye, your honor," said John, advancing up to the desk of that functionary in a rocking, walking-the-deck kind of gait. John at that moment appeared every inch a sailor. His trousers were blue, and of conspicuous width at the extremities; his jacket was of like color, and cloth, and was plentifully supplied with pearl studs; his black silk handkerchief was loosely tied in a swivel knot, and the collar of his check shirt was spread out over his shoulder.

"Connor," said the Recorder, "this woman here, Ann Hays, says you have been to her house, and threatened to commit murder—What have you to say to the charge?"

"Why, Lord love your honor," said Connor, again ejecting a quantity of tobacco juice, and twirling his little glazed hat around on his thumb, "why, Lord love your honor, Ann is the little 'painter' that I got hitched on to my boys in Boston, four years ago. Murder her! I'd as soon stove in the bulwarks of my own existence."

Ann Hays.—"Well, your honor, I'm afraid of my life of him."

"Ah, Nancy! Nancy!" said John drawing the cuff of his jacket across his right eye, and wiping away a tear that stood in the corner— "Ah, Nancy! I have encountered many a breeze since I left four years ago in Boston, but this blow does more injury to the rigging of my heart than all I have yet to contend with, to be led into shoal water by the false lights of the enemy is bad, but to be deserted and disowned by a craft that one took in convoy with him for life, is a little too much for the timbers of my constitution—it is, Nancy."

Recorder.—"This language is too figurative—too technical for me. Can't you speak, Connor, in a manner in which I can better understand you?"

Connor.—"Certainly, your honor. Then keeping right ahead, without making a tack either to windward or to leeward, I will read over the logbook of my life, as I have it in my memory, since first I hailed Nancy. As I said before, your honor, we got braced in Boston, about four years ago. A chaplain, I forget his name, but here's his certificate—"produces a certificate of their marriage—"made it all taut, and I felt as happy as if I was sailing before a three month's trade wind. I unfortunately got on a spree and put to sea—first in the S. ship Ohio, and then in the frigate Columbia. During my cruise I never forgot my Nancy, and many a time in the silent watches of the night, I used to look aloft, and fancy I could see her pretty dimpled cheeks and bright eyes smiling on me among the stars; and often did I fancy, as the wind sung through the rigging, that I heard her sweet voice say,

"I'm true to you still—true as the compass to its point, Jack Connor."

"But it has not been so, your honor; for when I came home with my pay in my pocket, to throw into her apron, I found she had hauled in her anchor and put to sea with a lubber, who knows nothing about anything, except boiling duff and making chowder. Oil, sir, it has shivered the timbers of Jack Connor, and never, never more, does he expect to see his sails filled again with the winds of domestic contentment."

Here Jack applied the cuff of his blue jacket to his eyes again, and "mopped up," as it were, the tears as they sprung out one after another.

Nancy then undertook to tell her story in her own way; from all of which, we learned that they had been married in Boston as Jack said; Jack ran off to sea, and she ran off to New Orleans with a French cuisinier, under whose "protection" she now is and wishes to remain.

Jack remains in the calaboose till he "ships" or finds some one to go security that he will keep the peace. The moral atmosphere that surrounds him at the present time, looks decidedly squally.

Sad Incident.—Captain Wm. Edwards, of Chatham county, near Emmerson's, had his foot torn off by a thrashing machine, on the 5th inst. The leg has since been amputated just below the knee, by Drs. Garrett and Hanmer.—North Carolinian.

Cotton.—The receipts since our last reach 2633 bales, and the sales in the same time 1009 bales. A few bales Georgia long Cotton have been sold at prices ranging from 17 to 30c. per pound.

Rice.—We have no change to notice in prices, and would refer to our quotations for the value of the article. We would remark, however, that the demand continues limited, and confined almost exclusively to small purchases for coastwise shipment. The sales of the week reach some 600 tierces, against the receipt in the same time of 1039 tierces. The sales are 160 at $3 1/2, 316 at 3 3/4, and 100 tierces, at $3 1/2 per cent.

Rough Rice.—There has been no arrivals of Rough Rice during the week just closed, and we have consequently no sales to report.

Grain.—The receipts of Corn during the week have been 1200 bushels N. Ca., and 2600 bushels common Baltimore, which have changed hands, the former at 45c, and the latter at 47c. per bushel. There has been an additional arrival of a cargo of North Carolina, about 3000 bushels, which, as it was disposed of to arrive, the terms have not transpired. Prices, however, are on the advance, and we now quote 47 a 50c, as a fair index of the state of the market, but must remark, at the same time, that parcels of superior quality would bring something above our outside figure. There has been some demand for Corn, during the week, and between 8 and 10,000 bushels have been sent into the interior. Some 1500 bushels Peas have been received since our last, which were taken by a dealer within the range of our quotations. No Oats have come to hand this week, and present quotations are therefore nominal.

Bacon and Lard.—The transactions of the week in both articles have been on a very limited scale. Some 50 hds. of Shoulders and Sides have been sold within the range of our figures; and 300 pieces Baltimore sides brought 7c. There was a sale of Western Lard, at prices not made public; but our present quotations will give a fair market value for the article.

Cotton.—The market has become less active, and closes with rather a dull appearance; the sales made, however, have been at full rates.

Naval Stores.—The quantity of Turpentine coming, is not large for the season, but the demand remains unsold. We understand that some Newbern has been sold at $3 00 per bbl., which is a reduction on this description—and the same price at which the last sales of Wilmington were made for 280 lbs. There has been recently more demand for Rosin, for export, and we notice further sales of 1700 bbls. Wilmington, at 70; 200 Newbern, 58c, delivered; and 550 Washington, at 54c, cash. Of Spirits Turpentine, on private terms; 50 at 36c, cash; and in lots, at previous prices. The stock is now light. Selected Tar may be quoted $2 a $2 1/2, but little demand.

Rice.—The transactions have been very moderate, embracing about 260 tierces, at $3.50 a $4.00, cash; holders are very firm, and show no disposition to recede in prices.

DIED.

In Baltimore, on the 16th inst., of a disease of long standing Mr. Doyle O'Hanlon, of Fayetteville, well known as having been for many years engaged with indomitable spirit and energy, in steam navigation on the Cape Fear River. He has left behind a numerous family, and a large circle of warmly attached friends.

In Craven county, on the 4th inst., Mrs. Cassandra E. Benner, wife of Jas. N. Benner, Esq., in the 19th year of her age.

In New Orleans, on the 20th ult., Mr. John Cameron, aged 25 years, a native of Fayetteville.

[COMMUNICATED.]

In Sampson county, on the 12th ult., at half past 7 o'clock, P. M., Mrs. Ann Sellers, wife of Col. John Sellers, of Sampson county.

Seldom have we been called upon to record an event of a more sad and melancholy nature, than the death of this highly esteemed and excellent lady. Such a dispensation, is at any time deeply afflictive to the family, relatives, and friends, who are left to mourn their loss. In her departure, however, not only a fond husband and two orphan children, but a whole community, have sustained an irreparable loss. In the circumstances of her departure, however, there is every possible alleviation to the grief of her family and friends. Her character was one of more than ordinary excellence. In her was happily blended a rare assemblage of all those amiable qualities which adorn the life and conduct of her sex, in every relationship of life. She was kind to her friends, hospitable to strangers, charitable to the poor and afflicted of her neighborhood, forbearing to her domestics, and ever ready to do good to all, as she had opportunity. All therefore, who knew her, will unite their regrets and sympathies in deploring her premature death. But one excellence which displayed itself with pre-eminent lustre in the life of this lady, and without which, all others would prove unavailing, was her uniform, consistent, and exemplary Christian deportment. She had been for years a member of the Presbyterian Church at Shiloh, and always furnished the brightest assurances, that her's was the religion of the heart. In a conversation with a friend, in the first stages of her sickness, whilst her mental faculties were yet unclouded, she gave evidences of perfect resignation to the will of her Heavenly Father, and placed her entire confidence in the Saviour, and in what he did and suffered, as the foundation of her hopes for a glorious and blessed immortality, beyond the grave. All therefore, who were acquainted with her in general, and especially her Christian character, may rest in the most unflinching assurance, that what is their loss is her eternal gain. That she has only exchanged her place in the church militant, to mingle in the employments and praises of the church triumphant. That with her, the trials of life are forever past, and her happy spirit, borne upon the wings of faith, has ascended to unite with the general assembly and church of the first born, and to hear that welcome plaudit, well done thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord.

They are gone to the grave, but twice around to do, where they were, when they were, and will restore thee. Where death has no sting, since the Saviour has died. To her afflicted family and friends, and to the little church of which she was a member and a bright ornament, we would say, weep not as those who have no hope, but prepare to join her in the realms of endless bliss, where parting shall be no more. A WITNESS OF THE ABOVE SCENE, Raleigh Standard and Fayetteville Observer, are requested to copy.
